Historical

Of deer cows and sulfur springs

The legend tells about the founding of the town of Wildbad Kreuth: In the woods between the Weißbach Valley and the Blue Mountains, a hunter is said to have observed an injured doe seeking relief from its suffering at a spring. The shepherds and farmers of the area followed suit - and found themselves healed. At that time, no one knew that the water was sulfuric and truly beneficial for health, but the healing power of the spring was undeniable. In 1490, the „Saint Leonard“ bath in Kreuth is mentioned for the first time. A proper bathhouse is eventually built by Abbot Heinrich V. of Tegernsee in the year 1511. This marks the beginning of health-related business in Wildbad Kreuth, and the first buildings are constructed. Until the secularization in 1803, the bath remains in the possession of the Benedictines in Tegernsee. The then bathmaster Simon Zahler acquires the chapel, residence and bathhouse, as well as the surrounding meadows and forests. In 1818, King Max I Joseph of Bavaria purchases the buildings - and the era of the Wittelsbach family in the Kreuth valley begins. The architect Leo von Klenze, commissioned by the king, constructs the still-standing two-winged building along with ancillary buildings. Now, not only the springs attract the prominent figures of that time, but also the whey cures gain popularity. The Wildbad seems to survive World War II unscathed - until the night of May 4th to 5th, 1945, when American troops set fire to the brewing house. In 1956/57, Ludwig Wilhelm has it renovated, and the sanatorium regains its former glory. Starting from June 1, 2023, Korb-inian Kohler is the new operator of the Ducal Guesthouse „Altes Bad“
